

Challenges for journals working with institutions on research integrity

Discussion points

Chris Graf, Co-Chair, COPE

Disclosure: CG works for Wiley. CG receives no form of compensation from COPE for his voluntary role with COPE.

Stewardship

What might “good” stewardship look like?

THE WATCHDOGS

Introducing the Doing the Right Thing award, honoring those who clean up the scientific literature

By IVAN ORANSKY @ivanoransky and ADAM MARCUS @armarcus / MAY 5, 2017

Stewardship: ADA and Diabetes

2014

- Duplicate image
- Correction

2016

- Expression of concern: “reliability of data”
- Institutional investigation
- “Negligence” → Correction?

Stewardship

Concerns regarding the reliability of the data cannot be sufficiently mitigated by publishing another erratum with another image; therefore, the Panel recommends to retract the article

Reflecting on that case

Good: Open lines of communication

Needs work: Shared vision

Both are things to think about when we're talking about "collaboration and communication" between institutions and journals

For discussion, from the CLUE preprint

Journals ask:

- Who do I contact?
- What can I share?
- How do I decide when to contact?
- How do I manage data?

